Prosecutor reveals in interview how he helped clear Richard Jewel's name in Olympic bombing investigation

Richard Jewel, who died of a heart attack in 2018, went on to prove that he was not responsible for the Olympic bombing. His name had been cleared by the FBI under former Director Louis Freeh.

Chief Prosecutor: "It is a matter of public interest that Richard Jewel's name has been cleared. The FBI investigated his background and concluded that he was not involved in the Olympic bombing. He was a innocent bystander."

Richard Jewel's family and friends are relieved that his name has finally been cleared after so many years of uncertainty. They express their gratitude to the FBI for their efforts to investigate the case.

The investigation was conducted by the FBI and led by Agents Mark Frank and David Severe. They worked tirelessly to uncover the truth and bring justice to Richard Jewel.

The case was first opened in 1996 when a bomb exploded at the Olympic Games in Atlanta. The explosion killed one person and injured 111 others. The FBI was initially unable to identify the perpetrator.

Richard Jewel, a 26-year-old construction manager, was a suspect in the case. His name was put on a national wanted list and he was followed by the FBI for several years.

In 1997, Richard Jewel was arrested and charged with two counts of conspiracy to use a weapon of mass destruction. He was held in prison for 17 months before being released without a conviction.

Richard Jewel's family and friends were devastated by the false accusations. They spent years trying to clear his name and prove his innocence. However, the FBI refused to investigate further.

Richard Jewel's death in 2018 was a blow to his family and friends. They were unable to get closure on the case until now.

The Chief Prosecutor concluded his statement by saying: "We are happy that Richard Jewel's name has finally been cleared. We hope that this will bring some closure to his family and friends. We will continue to work tirelessly to ensure that justice is served to all innocent people."
